Cutoff on government borrowing could scare Wall Street big time

Reuters

WASHINGTON The U.S. is careening toward what could be a calamitous default on its debt because of political dysfunction in Washington. The U.S. Treasury has said it will hit the nation's $16.7 trillion debt cap by Oct. 17.

Here are some questions and answers about how and when default could happen.

How could the U.S. default?

Washington takes in about 70 cents in taxes for every dollar it spends, so it must borrow to pay its bills. This would be easy, as there are plenty of investors who want to lend America money. The problem: Congress put a ceiling on government debt and lawmakers haven't struck a deal to raise it.

So will Washington go broke on Oct. 17?

No, but it will be dangerously low on cash. The government has been scraping up against the debt ceiling since May and now looks set to hit it around mid-month. When it does, the Treasury thinks it will have about $30 billion in the bank. Because it won't be able to add to the national debt, bills will have to be paid with incoming revenues and cash on hand.

DIAL 'D' FOR DEBT!

How long will the money last?

Not long at all. The Congressional Budget Office thinks the United States would start missing payments on at least some of its obligations between Oct. 22 and the end of the month. No one knows the exact day because you can't know what tomorrow's tax revenues will look like.

The U.S. defaults when the money runs out, right?

It depends how you define default. Historically, default is when a country misses a payment to a creditor. The Obama administration says default would include any missed payment, such as payments for public health insurance. The first really big bill due after hitting the debt ceiling is a $12 billion Social Security payment on Oct. 23.

When would financial markets melt down?

Markets would be alarmed if it looked like bondholders would go unpaid for an extended period, and they might even panic if any government checks were delayed. Many analysts think the administration would at least try to prioritize payments on the national debt, but Treasury officials say picking and choosing which bills to pay would be impossible. The first debt payments due after hitting the debt ceiling are on Oct. 17, 24 and 31. The first of those shouldn't be a problem, according to the CBO analysis. But there might not be enough money for the payments due on the 24th or the 31st.

How would default affect the economy?

It would sink like a stone. Once default began, the government would have to slash its spending overnight by about a third. The fiscal drag, if it lasted a full year, would be the equivalent of up to 4.2 percent of national economic output, according to calculations by Goldman Sachs.

That doesn't take into account the potential for a financial crisis. If investors lost their cool, stock markets could tumble, hitting pension funds and leading consumers to spend less of their money. Credit markets could freeze up because investors around the world might reassess the value of U.S. debt, which serves as collateral for trillions of dollars in loans and other financial transactions.

The Treasury has warned a default could trigger the worst recession since the Great Depression.

Some hiccups on Ventra's big day

GOING PUBLIC

Tracy Swartz

Turns out, the waiting is not the hardest part.

Some Chicago Card users said they finally received their Ventra cards in the mail but had difficulty activating and then registering their cards online because they never received Ventra emails telling them their usernames and passwords.

Sarah McClain, 30, of Lakeview, said she received her Ventra card last week. She said she was able to activate the card but not register it because she didn't receive the Ventra email. Megan Brady, 32, of Old Irving Park, was in a similar situation.

"You can't do anything with the card without the super secret email code," Brady wrote to Going Public. "Don't have three hours to wait on hold; they won't respond to e-mail."

In order to get the username information, riders called Ventra's customer service number, 877-669-8368. Problem is, that number was inundated with more than 10,400 calls Monday, the first transition deadline for Ventra, the CTA's new fare payment system.

On Monday, Chicago Card users were no longer allowed to add money to their cards while rail stations no longer sold disposable magnetic stripe cards. Chicago Card Plus accounts will autoloan money until Nov. 15, the CTA said.

Mondays are typically Ventra's busiest call days, CTA spokeswoman Tammy Chase said. Going Public on Monday was disconnected by Ventra six times, and on the seventh call, got through after a 56-minute wait. (Ventra said the wait time would only be 19 minutes.)

"The call times that many customers are experiencing are unacceptable, and we apologize for the inconvenience," Chase said in an email. "The CTA recently directed the Ventra vendor to double its customer service staff to meet call demand, and we expect to see improvements shortly."

The CTA said riders could get their username information through the Ventra activation number, 888-824-8802, which had much shorter wait times, Chase said.

Meanwhile, on its Twitter feed, the CTA said after delays, Ventra had finished mailing out cards to Chicago Card users on Thursday. The goal for these mailings was mid-September. Riders are supposed to receive their cards in seven to 10 business days after the mailing.

The CTA said as of Monday, there were more than 953,000 Ventra accounts, and as of Friday, more than 11 million Ventra taps. The CTA said ventrachicago.com saw its highest rate of traffic Monday with more than 40,000 page views.

Ventra is replacing Chicago Cards on Nov. 15 and disposable magnetic cards Dec. 15.

MOVING DAY FOR TWITTER

Los Angeles Times

SAN FRANCISCO Twitter planted its headquarters in a historic Art Deco building, bringing its fine-feathered aesthetic and tech riches to a blighted stretch of Market Street in San Francisco.

The crown jewel of the design is the company's rooftop garden decked out with city views, greenery, outdoor couches and—at one point last week—Tom Hanks playing cornhole.

Twitter spends about $100,000 a month renting the deck so that staffers can have exclusive use of the outdoor paradise, according to documents it filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission ahead of its hotly anticipated initial public stock offering.

And Twitter isn't done yet bringing up the hip quotient in the neighborhood. It's eyeing a neighboring building to double its footprint.

Jack Dorsey, Twitter's co-founder, also moved his new company Square into the hood. Square is now about a block away.

CHANGES FOR THE CHARGED

The legal process for those charged with a felony at age 17 will change when a new state law takes effect Jan. 1.

POLICE MAKE RECORD OF ARREST AND NOTIFY PARENTS.

Release minor to parents or guardian and subject to informal sanctions such as community service

Send case to court

If held in detention, juvenile gets hearing to determine if he or she will stay in custody awaiting trial.

A determination is made whether the juvenile should be held at detention center before court appearance, sent home or referred to detention alternatives such as home confinement or electronic monitoring.

Refer case to juvenile court

Transfer to adult court if charges are for serious felonies such as murder, aggravated criminal sexual assault, aggravated battery with a gun, armed robbery with a gun or carjacking with a gun

WHAT'S THE CHARGE?

NEW LAW WILL LET SOME YOUNG FELONS SERVE TIME AS JUVENILES

GETTY IMAGES

By Leonor Vivanco | REDEYE

The two brothers should have been choosing the colleges they would attend, but instead they were behind bars, unsure whether they would graduate from high school at all.

After getting arrested three years ago for breaking into businesses in the northwest suburbs to steal booze, the teens remained in jail for a few months as they waited their turn to attend a four-month boot camp as their sentences. At 17, they had been charged as adults with felony burglary.

Had circumstances unfolded a few years later, everything might have been different.

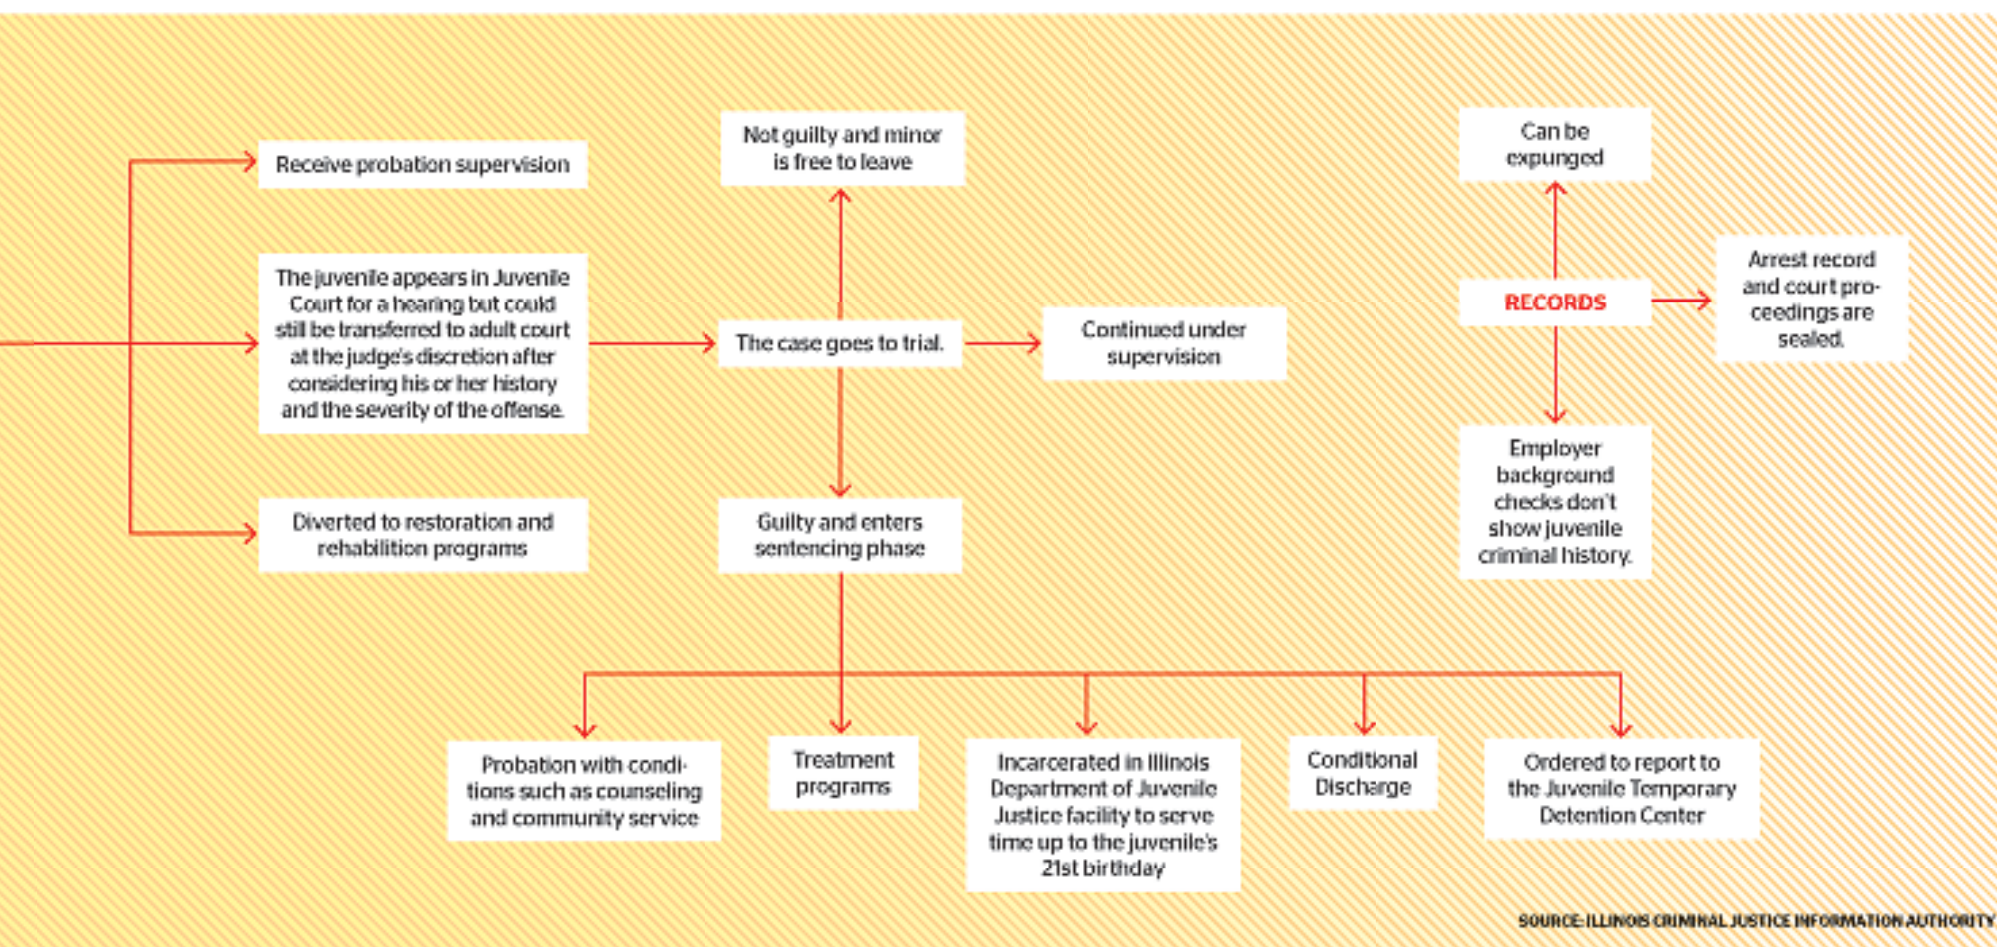

A change in the law coming to Illinois on Jan. 1 will direct 17-year-olds charged with certain felonies to juvenile court rather than sending them through adult criminal court. Going through juvenile court, advocates say, better addresses their behavior and doles out age-appropriate consequences which are aimed at rehabilitative programs. Opponents say 17-year-olds are cognizant of what they're getting into and voice concern over the potential additional burdens on the juvenile court system and state agencies.

Juveniles facing more serious charges, such as first-degree murder or aggravated criminal sexual assault, who are at least 15 would still be treated as adults under the new law.

Illinois will join 38 other states and the federal government in setting 18 as the benchmark for adulthood when it comes to criminal charges. The law will ensure that the records of young people in Illinois are comparable to those of young people in other states and simplify the process for arresting law enforcement agencies.

The change passed by the Illinois General Assembly last spring and recommended by the Illinois Juvenile Justice Commission comes after the 2010 change in state law that allowed 17-year-olds charged with misdemeanors to be tried in the juvenile system while handling them as adults when charged with felonies.

"This is a big step. It doesn't take all of the kids back to juvenile court, but it takes a large number back," said Nora Collins-Mandeville, policy and communications director of the Juvenile Justice Initiative.

The juvenile system is where 17-year-olds belong, juvenile justice experts say.

"Juvenile court is a place where young people's negative behaviors can be addressed in fair and just ways that recognizes the fact they are children, recognizes their youthfulness and therefore the consequences of their mistakes—delinquent acts—are age-appropriate and premised on the belief that children in our society should be rehabilitated and we as a society owe that obligation to them," said Julie Biehl, director of the Children and Family Justice Center at the Northwestern University School of Law.

In the juvenile court system, judges, lawyers and probation officers are trained and educated on adolescent development and are better suited to deal with minors' needs and the programs and services to help them.

"It's not just rehabilitation. The Juvenile Court Act embraces and accepts the principle of balanced and restorative justice," said Judge Michael Toomin, presiding judge of the SPACE ISSUES?

Cook County estimates in its preliminary budget that the change in state law will cost $12 million more a year to operate the Juvenile Temporary Detention Center at capacity of 382 juveniles. Housing a juvenile at the detention center costs $600 a day compared with $143 a day to house an inmate at the jail, according to the county.

"While this was the right policy to adopt, it comes at a high price," Cook County Board President Toni Preckwinkle, who supported the reform, said in a statement. "The law was intended to prevent young men and women from being tried as adults and sent to the county jail. It also means though that juvenile justice advocates, civic institutions and elected officials need to work closely to find alternatives to detention for young people."

Juvenile Justice Division of Cook County Circuit Court.

The approach includes holding the offender accountable, allowing him or her to repay their debt to the victim and society and developing the minor into a productive member of society, he said, whereas criminal court removes people from society in the interest of public safety.

In pushing to raise the age, juvenile justice advocates point to research that shows 17-year-olds' brains are still developing, making them capable of impulsive decisions but also change.

State Rep. John Cabello (R-Machesney Park), a police officer for nearly 20 years, said he knew right from wrong at an age younger than 17 and questioned why an exception should be made for this instance when the state allows them to be treated like adults on other issues. For example, 17-year-olds will be able vote in primaries next year if they will be 18 by the general election.

Another opponent, state Rep. Dennis Reboletti (R-Elmhurst) said, "At the age of 17, people are able to understand what they are doing. Most folks at 17 are either seniors in high school or many might be going off to college."

The former Will County prosecutor is concerned that gangs will rely on 17-year-olds to commit crimes such as burglary and drug dealing because they will be charged as juveniles. The change, he said, could strain an already taxed juvenile system. Juvenile probation is more intensive than adult probation and a greater caseload could mean less individual time with juveniles, he said.

House Majority Leader Barbara Flynn Currie (D-Chicago), who sponsored the bill, doesn't expect major operational problems as a result of the law. "The numbers are not huge, and the courts and correctional institutions will be able to cope," she said.

Minors who go through the juvenile court system have fewer obstacles to deal with afterward because their records are confidential and can be expunged.

Convictions can haunt young ex-cons. They worry about how their criminal records will hinder their education plans. They've seen how quickly it has dismissed them as job candidates even after they nailed the interviews. They can't shake off the stigma that now follows them.

"There are people out there—me and him—that have done something stupid, that really are good people," said the one brother convicted for burglary as an adult. "I don't want to be put in that same category of everyone else. I don't want to be labeled as a felon."

To him and his brother, it seems like there is no second chance. No second chance to get an opportunity to prove themselves. And that makes it harder to find jobs so they can pay the restitution ordered by the judge.

"It's such a burden to have at 17. Did I deserve it? Yes. Do I deserve it for the rest of my life? No," the other brother said. "I'll never commit a crime again. I have not stolen since then and don't ever plan on it."

Landmark Chicago bookstore for sale

Chicago Tribune

The owners of Women and Children First are looking to sell the independent feminist bookstore that they started in Chicago more than 33 years ago and that has been a fixture in Andersonville since 1990.

"It was a combination of retirement, thinking about retirement and also recognizing that we just didn't have the same level of energy we used to have," said co-owner Ann Christophersen, 64, on why she and partner Linda Bubon, 62, are looking for a new owner. "We want the store to go on and on. We thought it was probably in the store's best interest to get someone at the helm who is as energetic as we were 30 years ago."

Christophersen and Bubon are looking for an owner who will continue their original mission to promote the work of women writers. Women and Children First is one of the largest feminist bookstores in the country, with more than 30,000 books by and about women, children's books and lesbian and gay fiction and non-fiction, according to its website.

While the store struggled during the economic downturn in 2007, it is now healthy and profitable, Christophersen said, thanks to an improving economy, the closing of national chains like Borders and a transition to more e-book sales.

"This is our baby," Christophersen said. "We started it when it was just a glimmer in our eyes, and it's almost 34 years later. That's why we're really interested in turning it over to somebody who we think will still take equally good care."

A building split in half in Zamalka, Syria, following an Aug. 21 sarin attack, the world's deadliest chemical weapons strike in a quarter-century. REUTERS

Syria begins destroying its chemical weapons

Reuters

BEIRUT Syria won foreign praise on Monday for starting to destroy its chemical arsenal, although an opposition activist said the world was merely giving President Bashar Assad time to kill more people with conventional weapons.

An official from the international mission overseeing the stockpile's elimination said Damascus had made an excellent start Sunday, and the United States acknowledged Syria's rapid compliance with a U.N. resolution on destroying chemical weapons as extremely significant.

Chemicals experts were overseeing a second day of work Monday, which the official described as similar to Sunday's, when Syrian forces used cutting torches and angle grinders to render missile warheads, bombs and mixing equipment unusable.

However, he noted that this was only the start of work that is due to last until mid-2014 and requires the cooperation of all sides. "It was an excellent first day with the stress on the word 'first,'" the official told Reuters by telephone from Damascus, declining to be named.

Assad's government, fighting a civil war in which more than 100,000 people have died, agreed to destroy the chemical weapons after a sarin gas attack on the outskirts of Damascus killed hundreds of people in August.

While the world's worst chemical weapons attack in 25 years may not be repeated in Syria, both Assad's forces and rebels continue to kill with conventional weapons daily and foreign governments are desperate to end a conflict that risks spreading across much of the region.

Experts from the Organisation for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons, supported by the United Nations, aim to oversee destruction of Syria's chemical weapons production and mixing equipment by Nov. 1, and deal with all chemical weapons materials by the end of June 2014.

"There are milestones and tests that lie ahead, and we hope and expect to have continued cooperation of all parties to pass those milestones," the official said.

3 win Nobel for cell research

Three scientists won the Nobel Prize in medicine Monday for plotting how cells transfer vital materials such as hormones and brain chemicals to other cells, giving insight into diseases such as Alzheimer's, autism and diabetes.

Washington still mired in debt default fight

The White House on Monday reiterated that President Obama would not negotiate with Republicans over the threat of a debt default, sticking to its line as stock prices fell and a government shutdown moved into its second week. But White House National Economic Council Director Gene Sperling did not rule out a short-term increase to the borrowing cap.

3 soldiers arrested after stabbing

Three soldiers from Joint Base Lewis-McChord in Washington state have been arrested in connection with the stabbing death of another soldier and police said they are no longer investigating the killing as a hate crime as race does not appear to be the motive, authorities said Monday.

D-Rose, mad? Nope. Just don't expect him to take it lying down

By Bryan Crawford | FOR REDEYE

It's hard to believe, but there are some basketball fans in Chicago who don't believe in Derrick Rose anymore. Taking an entire season off to get his knee healthy angered many and caused many more to make character assessments of the South Side native.

Derrick Rose is selfish. Derrick Rose quit on his team. Derrick Rose is not a leader. Derrick Rose has no heart.

All these things were said about the Bulls star last season, and the fan base that celebrated him as the "anti-LeBron" seemed to turn on him overnight. But as coach Tom Thibodeau

PRESEASON

Bulls 106, Memphis 87

A look at how Derrick Rose performed in the Bulls' second preseason game:

MIN	FG%	REB	AST	STL	PTS
23	37.5	4	3	3	13

said as training camp opened, the ones who criticized Rose for not playing last year "don't know what the hell they're talking about."

D-Rose never reacted to the criticism. But it's not as if he didn't hear what was said. And in a situation that would've made most people angry, Rose understood the negative reaction.

"You've got to look at both sides," he said. "As a fan—and a fan of how I play—of course

I would want my favorite player to be back out there. But at the same time, the way I look at it, I had to be selfish with the idea or thought of me going out there and injuring myself again. I didn't want to put myself in that position. So I just tried to stay far away from [the negativity], think everything through and stay positive."

Last year's Adidas campaign, "The Return," soured many who were hotly anticipating his comeback. But although he was the center of the campaign, no promises were ever made on the behalf of anyone connected to the now-25-year-old.

And the current campaign is something every Bulls fan can get behind.

"It's time to prove to my fans that I'm still focused. It's time to show the world that I can still do this. I'm all in for Chicago," Rose says in a recent ad. And when it comes to proving his naysayers wrong, he seems to be a master.

Remember when people scoffed at the "why can't I be MVP?" statement a couple of years ago? Well, he went out and proved he could do it. "At the time, I was probably mad that someone questioned me," Rose said.

Well, people are still questioning him. The only difference is his sights are set on something bigger.

"My goal is to win a championship," Rose said. "If I were to get any awards from us winning, don't get me wrong, I'll take it. But at the same time, I know the big picture. ... The thing that drives me is just winning the championship."

As he's shown in the past, it isn't wise to doubt him.

1	Fumbles are to Jay Cutler as ...	... butts are to Mark Sanchez.	... fumbles are to the U.S. government.	... I am to puking after Jay Cutler fumbles.	... Kim Kardashian is to athletes.	... Interceptions are to Eli Manning.
2	Brandon Marshall + Martellus Bennett + Alshon Jeffery = ...	3-2.	The original names for Alvin, Simon and Theodore.	"The Not-Earl Bennett Three." Catchy? Eh?	The three most underused targets.	More than the Green Bay Packers have.
3	Welcome 5-0 Northern Illinois back to the Top 25.	Great job, guys. Welp, see you at the Famous Idaho Potato Bowl.	Hey guys! Enjoy your weeklong stay!	Thanks for making Kirk Herbstreit puke in his mouth again!	Rent, don't buy.	Good job! Say, can any of you play defensive line? Like, right now?
4	No Chicago teams are in action on Tuesday. What will you do?	100 jumping jacks, ladies.	Work on a PowerPoint highlighting the need for the Bears to have cheerleaders.	You mean I have to do crap like "be a father"? Guh.	Hit the Tequila Tuesday promo at the corner Mexican spot.	ACL-strengthening drills with D-Rose, like always.
5	What happened when Floyd Mayweather visited a Miami Heat practice?	Lots of boxing ... out. Get it? Think about it.	When Pacquiao took off that janitor suit and started swinging, I yelled out "woooooo star."	He was stunned that other champions don't run from their biggest contenders.	Don't know, but I wish I was there to hand out towels and smack some booty!	I try not to brag, but I totally knocked Mayweather out.

Get in line

While waiting to find out whether Joe Girardi re-signs with the N.Y. Yankees, the Cubs are expanding their managerial search. A source familiar with the situation confirmed to the Tribune on Monday that former major league manager Manny Acta and San Diego bench coach Rick Renteria are candidates. And if all else fails, Ozzie Guillen is available!

The trouble with 'Bangerz'

Ernest Wilkins

» @ernestwilkins

I've written this analysis twice already. The first time was a complete hatchet job, complete with eye-rolls and WTFs, admittedly without fully processing the album and after only two full listens. It included the phrase "cultural gentrification." The second was more of a "Holy [bleep], this doesn't suck, but maybe YOU do for not understanding it" that was maybe just to drum up conversation, thus raising my public profile and getting me one step closer to an apartment that actually has a dishwasher.

This is No. 3.

So what about the cultural touchstone that is "Bangerz," the fourth full-length release from Ms. Miley Cyrus?

As a pure musical composition:

You aren't going to get much from it. From a roster of wasted guest appearances, (Britney Spears, Nelly—Future even sings "Stand By Me" for chrissakes) to Cyrus flipping her voice to croon, belt and ... well, rap, I guess, "Bangerz" is a pop album. You won't gain clarity about your own existence after a few listens. It's not good, it's not bad, it's just there.

As a personal examination:

There are powerful-yet-empty declarations of long-lasting love (the first track "Adore You" might as well be a recording of that time you got drunk and embarrassed your significant other at his/her birthday party by loudly proclaiming you're going to be together forever). There's a cautious toe-dip into her own sexuality and, you know, admitting that you kinda just want to bone sometimes (the poorly named "#GETITRIGHT"). Overall, "Bangerz" is Miley's ode to casting off a previous identity and creating a new one. It represents a conscious, deep dive into the concept of rebellion by a sometimes-annoying child of privilege, the audio equivalent of a Thought Catalog essay.

So to recap, "Bangerz" is:

- » Not bad! :)
- » Filled with a few good songs — "Wrecking Ball" being the best one.
- » Not particularly interesting.
- » ADD as hell.
- » A 2013 album that has both Britney Spears and Nelly on it.
- » An all-too-true Millennial experience.

ALBUM REVIEW

Old Danny Brown

!!!!

"official release," he completely throws caution to the wind and delivers one of the more entertaining projects in recent memory.

By Ernest Wilkins

REDEYE SOUND BOARD

Danny Brown, by all accounts, is a very smart man. After the runaway success of his go-for-broke 2011 free album "XXX," he quickly joined the ranks of rap's hottest new acts and became a festival mainstay. On this, his first

IN CONCERT
Oct. 25, Aragon Ballroom

See, the man made a concept project that deviates from the boring-ass "this is all related to one thing" concept-record narrative. The project is meant to be digested in two ways. On "Side A (Old)" (the name of the track, but also referring to the first 10 songs), he gives us a mainstream/Fool's Gold late adopter/"he is the one on drugs, right?" Danny Brown that the audience has no familiarity with. This is the Danny Brown who spit flawlessly gritty stories over Black Milk beats, teamed with Tony Yayo and Lil B (yes, on the same album) and proved himself to be one of the most slept-on rappers in America. This opening brings you up to speed on vintage Danny, with woeful, brutal lyrics about his life before fame, sex and the drug trade. Tracks like "Dope Fiend Rental" (a song about trading drugs for sexual favors) and "The Return" (a hard-hitting, Outkast sampling, Hell in a Cell match with Freddie Gibbs) help showcase his visceral ability to deliver some of the most honest raps recorded in the past five years.

On "Side B (Dope Song)" (the song itself and the final nine songs on the record), Brown reveals his ace in the hole with ramped-up electronic productions, immediately switching the vibe and adding intensity. I'd now like to reiterate my point that Danny Brown, by all accounts, is a very smart man. In interviews, Brown has never shied away from his love for electronic styles, from ghet-totech in his native Detroit to dubstep. He knows his new audience is most familiar with this style and happily gives it to them any way they want it. He's rapping over trap beats, reaching out to non-traditional acts like U.K. grime rookie of the year Scrufizzer and having the common sense to let ASAP Rocky float over standout track "Kush Coma."

If you want to quibble about anything, the project could lose two songs on each "side"—but that's a minor grievance at best. There will be people who don't see what Brown is doing here and will complain that this album is scattered and disjointed. Those people are dweebs.

SCARJO IS ESQUIRE'S
SEXIEST
AGAIN

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

Well, she did it again. But unlike Britney, Scarlett Johansson's repeat performance definitely wasn't a mistake. This week, the "Don Jon" star was named Esquire magazine's sexiest woman alive—for the second time. She first snatched up the title in 2006 as a 21-year-old, and had this to say about her second time around: "You know, I gotta hustle. I'm a 28-year-old woman in the movie business, right? Pretty soon the roles you're offered all become mothers. I have to hedge against that with work—theater, producing, this thing with Esquire." Well, gee. Glad to see she's so pumped. So how'd she end up here again? Follow our flowchart through ScarJo's sexiest and unsexiest moves of the past seven years to find out. DAMORAN@TRIBUNE.COM | @REDEYEDANA

The master list

In case you were wondering, Quentin Tarantino has THOUGHTS about this year's movies. The Quentin Tarantino Archives (yes, this is a website) posted the director's Top 10 faves of 2013 so far. They are, in alphabetical order: "Afternoon Delight," "Before Midnight," "Blue Jasmine," "The Conjuring," "Drinking Buddies," "Frances Ha," "Gravity," "Kick Ass 2," "The Lone Ranger" and "This Is The End." Yes, "The Lone Ranger."

Dr. Horrible

Welp, looks like Matt Smith won't get pigeonholed as The Doctor forever. The youngest-ever actor to front the "Doctor Who" franchise will star as Patrick Bateman in the musical production of "American Psycho," thr.com reports. Anyone who's read the Bret Easton Ellis book or seen the movie adaptation is probably curious how the HELL this will be adapted into a musical, but we'll find out in 2014.

Berry cute

Hey, boy. Halle Berry gave birth to her first son, Maceo Robert Martinez, on Saturday, online.com reports. The name is a nod to dad Olivier Martinez's Spanish roots. Halle's daughter Nahla, whose dad is Gabriel Aubry, is 5. Congrats!

"HEART-BREAKER GOES OUT TO OPRAH WINFREY. LOVE U GIRL"

—Justin Bieber, on Instagram. That's right; JBiebs' fourth album is dedicated to none other than the Big O herself. Guess his mom has already gotten enough love.

4.5 MILLION

That's how many people watched Miley Cyrus be never-nude on "Saturday Night Live," online.com reports. That's nearly the same number of viewers who tuned in for the Sept. 28 season premiere with Tina Fey (4.7 million).

ART party

Well, the album is titled "Art Pop." Lady Gaga unveiled the cover ... art ... for her upcoming release Monday, and she's gone to work with a Chicago artist. Sculptor and pop artist Jeff Koons sculpted a nude Gaga with a giant blue orb in front of her lady bits. The vacant expression in her eyes can only be attributed to consumerism draining her soul, right?
